Squeeze are a British band, that came to prominence in the United Kingdom during the new wave period of the late '70s, and continued recording successfully in the '80s and '90s. They are known in the U.K. for their hit songs "Cool for Cats," "Up the Junction," "Tempted," "Labelled with Love," "Black Coffee in Bed," "Another Nail in My Heart," "Pulling Mussels (from the Shell)," "Hourglass," and more. All of Squeeze's hits were written by band members Chris Difford and Glenn Tilbrook, with the former penning the lyrics and the latter handling the composition. The duo were hailed as "the heirs to Lennon and McCartney's throne" during their peak of popularity in the early '80s.

The group formed in Deptford, London, in 1974, and first broke up in 1982. Squeeze then reformed in 1985, and disbanded again in 1999. The band reunited for tours through the United States and United Kingdom in 2007, and this touring version of Squeeze has continued on ever since. In 2010, they released Spot the Difference, an album of newly recorded versions of older material. The band's first album of all-new material since 1998, Cradle to the Grave, was released just last year in October 2015.
